An Alligator Story.

A gentleman who recently moved from Florida to this county we are told says that alligators were so numerous in the section where he lived that on one occasion he killed 700 in two hours with a grubbing hoe. He also claims he lost a right snug little sum of money by not knowing the market value of their teeth as a man who afterwards passed by the spot where he had slain the alligators gathered up the teeth and sold them for $300—Irwin (Ga.) News.

Gee whiz! That's a little fellow. When we were down on the Amazon River three years ago we were lucky in killing alligators. We had for our destroyer a small bug similar to the hornet which when thrown into the alligator's mouth would sting him at the base of his tongue and the sting was so poisonous that the swelling would soon choke him to death. We killed this way on our trip 656 692 589 076 large alligators and sold their carcasses to a soap factory for just over five million dollars.—Harriman Hornet.
